Associates and Trainees Free Research Study Day: Entry Level Research

Guest Lecture Lane Greene The Economist, "Plain English" directed towards the Lay Scientific Summary 1-2pm

Valuable and important research ideas quickly get lost in day to day clinical pressures, because you don't have the energy and head space to develop the project. If you had a few simple steps consolidated in your mind, the goal becomes a sequence of achievable tasks. A few basic skills and some practical could make the mountain in to a mole hill!

The highlight of the day will be the Guest lecture by Lane Greene, which will attract a large audience from the larger academic community. Come and join us in the beautiful Firth Hall, University of Sheffield.

Multi-disciplinary team working is part and parcel of both clinical work, but also research. Both Allied Health professionals and doctors need to have the same research skills and will undoubtedly involve both working together in academic as well as clinical areas.

BSPGHAN has put on a study day for both trainees and Allied Health professionals, to particularly engage those new to research with a hope that it will enable the next generation of professors and academics to lead in their field.

Sessions will include the following:

- Getting started
- The Academic Toolkit
- Mentorship
- Project management in a full time clinical career
- Practical tips: Gant charts, deconstructing the research process and time management.
- Run through BSPGHAN start up application (£10,000 start-up grant).
- What the start-up charities are looking for?
- PPI involvement
- Ethics Applications
- Lay Summary and Plain English: Lane Green from The Economist will deliver this lecture and is opened to the Academic community and to the NHS senior management around the South Yorkshire region.

Registration: Free to Trainees and Allied health professionals. To register please e-mail:
